Her cheeks were flushed, and her jaw clenched as she faced him. She jabbed her finger at him. “You were in my house today, how dare you be so bold. You have no right!” He rose and faced her, his voice raised, “Your house, your house? No, it’s to be my house.” “Not if I have anything to say about it.” “You have nothing to say, Roseanna, now or ever. You’re forgetting I’m now your guardian.” Roseanna gathered her courage. “I could hardly forget that, but recall if you will you gave me time to settle my affairs during which time you are to stay out of my house and my life.” The Civil War is over, and the south defeated. Now 18-year-old Roseanna Ravenna yearns for what was lost, but the path forward will be difficult, if not impossible. Her family decimated, she is left alone, but determined to fulfill her father’s dream of rebuilding the family plantation, Pelicans Haven, the source of the finest racehorses in the region. With the support and comfort of loyal servants, Roseanna draws strength, and determination, and uses the skills learned from her father to restore the plantation. Someone doesn’t want her to succeed, the one person she thought she could trust. He sets out to defeat her until another man, a northern stranger, comes to her aid to help her fulfill her father’s dream. A novel of plot twisting surprises, adventure, heartaches, and hardships as the people of the south begin to regain their lives now that the war is over.
