Groseilliers and Radisson, Famous Fur Traders and Explorers and Their Northwest Voyages From 1652 to 1684 Robert F. Kerr

Hon. Robert Floyd Kerr (1850-1914) was a South Dakota educator, editor and legislator.

Médard Chouart des Groseilliers (1618–1696) was a French explorer and fur trader in Canada. He is often paired with his brother-in-law Pierre-Esprit Radisson who was about 20 years younger. Their decision to enter the English service led to the foundation of the Hudson's Bay Company which in turn was a major factor in making western Canada English.

In this book the author reviews evidence as to whether these fur traders were the first to visit the Dakota Territory in their river voyages of exploration from 1652 to 1684. He writes:

"In all the early histories of the Dakotas, there is a statement something like the following: "Two young Canadian fur traders accompanied a party of Indians to the far west, in 1654, and, it is thought, were the first white men who entered the present Territory of Dakota." The earliest recorded narrative of any travelers who penetrated the territory west of the Great Lakes is that of the two Frenchmen, Groseilliers and Radisson. The travels of these two are occasionally alluded to in the earlier histories of New France, but it was not until recent years that we have had access to an authentic account of their travels written by one of them."

This book originally published in 1902 has been reformatted for the Kindle and may contain an occasional defect from the original publication or from the reformatting.
